Cemeteries are more than just a Halloween theme; they are one of the most overlooked resources for genealogy research. If you're looking to go beyond the typical headstone information in your ancestor searches, check out this Legacy Tree article at <https://www.legacytree.com/blog/hidden-among-graves-cemetery-records>. It explains how to find cemetery records, the role of cemetery registers, establishing ancestor relationships, and more. You'll find additional tips and guidelines for cemetery research in Goal B6 at <https://www.thefhguide.com/project-9-united-statesb6.html#a> of the United States page. One of my favorite family history activities in doing research away from home is to stroll through cemeteries where my ancestors are likely buried. Frequently, it can be associated with the church that they attended. The excitement is finding their grave stones is even more special. Taking photos of their graves is another favorite memory to be shared with others. And yes, in offering a prayer for their existence and their ultimate influence on my life. If you are really in a bit of hurry, visit the cemetery's office for notes of where they are actually buried. Don't hesitate to ask to check their cemetery records for even more information.

Newspaper obituaries can also guide you to the cemeteries where your ancestor's located. Your local family history and public libraries also will have a subscription to Newspapers in Print. Peruse this posting at <http://www.kuzmich4.com/Facebook/Newspaper1.pdf> for many ways to find obituaries in these prime sources. In some instances, you can get a two-week free subscription which can also help you locate their obituaries in record time. In addition, the obituaries may have information about the funeral homes which may have even more info about your ancestors than the newspaper obituary.
