International research is the main stream for all of us. The sooner you learn how to research your ancestors, the better off you are. Conducting international research is not a easy walk in the park if your language skills aren't there or if you haven't clearly identified the special geographical locations of your ancestors. Fortunately, there are software apps that can translate from English to many foreign languages and vice versa. Google Translate at <https://translate.google.com> offers a free service instantly translates words, phrases, and web pages between English and over 100 other languages. In addition, You can also translate text, handwriting, photos, and speech apps. You can also use Translate on the web.

To accelerate your search for ancestors, consider viewing 70 websites below for countries world-wide that contain consolidated resources convenient for each individual country at <https://foothills-family-history.org/node/16>. Here's a sample of the first 70 listings readily available with individual postings clearly marked along with convenient links. If you need any other countries, territories and/or islands, please make a comment and your wish will be granted in future Facebook group postings to come to assist you.
