

Don't Miss These Top Ten Family History History Interviewing Questions: "Live" Podcast on Thursday, May 6, 2021 and even later

Probably the most common thing Lisa Louise Cooke hears from her viewers and podcast listeners is that they regret not having interviewed their parents, grandparents and other older relatives when they had the chance. If you ever needed encouragement to interview some of your living relatives even if you are the oldest? Consider this weekly broadcast from Lisa Louise Cooke as she awesome as the top family history podcaster in the world. I've studied with her privately and believe me, she is truly awesome. It is free and well worth it. If you miss it, each Thursday's morning podcast will be archived for future study and self-reflections at your convenience at the same URL cited below.

Can you identify with that?

Today is the day to stop putting off interviewing your relatives. Even if you're the oldest in your family, you can still make a difference to future generations by collecting the stories of your living relatives. Your descendants will be so glad you did!

Great questions can uncover great stories, so in Elevenses with Lisa episode 55 Lisa is going to share with you:

- Her top 10 family history interview questions
- Her Pro Tip for getting an exceptional interview
- Plus a Bonus Idea that will add value to your family history TODAY.

Be sure to watch to the end of the video for an added surprise that I guarantee she will put a smile on your face. And who doesn't need that?
